

MK Education – Partnering in Kingdom Work

EMPOWERING missions by shaping the next generation.

“Teaching at an MK school is essential for long-term missions to occur. Kids’ education is a major reason why families leave the field. My role allows years of experience and passion to remain working in foreign missions.” – Josh

ENCOURAGING the care and education of orphans and street kids in the Philippines.

ESSENTIAL training, mentorship, and coaching provided by parents of students helps fan the flame and grow the effectiveness of disciple-making movements in Southeast Asia.

“Each day, I have the opportunity to partner with parents to help grow their children’s emotional development, spiritual formation, and academic understanding. I serve families so that they can more fully serve the people of this country and grow God’s Kingdom.” – Andrea

“Maddy and I chose to serve as MK educators for two reasons. We see this work as essential to supporting the spread of the gospel throughout Asia, enabling other mission workers to focus on raising up the local church, etc. while we care for the education of their children. Also, both of us are MKs who loved growing up in this environment and wanted to pass along that blessing to the next generation.” – Tom

EXTENDING the ministry of workers in the Middle East, North Africa, and Central Asia.
